Photoshop is available for both the PC and Mac. Creating an Image The first step in the process is to create an image in Photoshop, which is fairly easy. You can crop an image if you want, turn the black-and-white image into color, and even create some special effects. Work with a browser's Save As dialog to save the image. You need to specify the location where you want to save the image and provide a filename. Use the Image menu on the left of the Photoshop screen to choose how you want the picture saved, as shown in Figure 3-1. You can save the picture to disk or, if you prefer to work with a file on a network, you can save it to a server through a Web browser such as Internet Explorer or Firefox. Figure 3-1: Browse through the image menus to save your image to disk, to the server, or both. Creating an Image from a Web Site Photoshop has some built-in features for displaying web images. You can display a web image directly within the

Photoshop program. If you're familiar with displaying images from a Web browser, you can use Photoshop to display a picture on the page by following these steps: 1. Open the web site in a Web browser. 2. Click the image in the Web browser to highlight it. 3. Right-click the highlighted image in the browser window and choose Copy

Image. 4. Click the Image menu (located on the left) and choose Paste from the drop-down menu that appears, as shown in Figure 3-2. Figure 3-2: Paste the image from the browser's clipboard into Photoshop. 5. In the Photoshop program, click the image to select it. Then, click the Edit menu and select Paste and Position from the drop-down menu. Your image should appear over the default transparent background. If the transparent background is on the top of the image, move the image in Photoshop so that it is above the background, as shown in Figure 3-3. Photoshop can also display images from a Web page while you edit it. As you edit the image, Photoshop automatically keeps the background image as it is and updates the image that you're editing on top of it. Photoshop even allows you to drag the original image directly from the web page into the Photoshop program. See more information on this process in the sidebar "Shopping with

Major criterion in relation to universal validity in an ultra-marathon. This study examined the relationships among serum testosterone level, race time, heart rate, rating of perceived exertion and the build-up of sweat. Self-rated difficulty of the course, total time of running, weight and perceived tiredness after the race were also examined. 17 male and 1 female ultra-marathon runners (n=18), entered in an ultra-marathon (minimum 50 km distance) participated in the study. The study was conducted on the race day, after the runners arrived. Venous blood samples were obtained on arrival at the race. The runners were asked to rate the level of perceived exertion and to provide a subjective rating of perceived difficulty of the course. The course was coded by a trained observer using a computerized program. The heart rate was measured continuously during the race. The total distance covered in the race was calculated from the recorded times, together with the distance covered at each split, and the velocities at each split. The serum testosterone level was measured by radioimmunoassay. All runners completed the race. The mean total distance covered was 50.1 +/- 2.6 km with a time of 14.4 +/- 1.2 h. The serum testosterone level correlated significantly with the total distance run
