A charismatic philanthropist is a bit like a charming sociopath. Also bear in mind that "charismatic" has nothing to do with charisma. Charisma is the ability to attract people. Charismatic is the ability to attract attention. So charismatic philanthropists are often appealing but not actually charismatic. Whereas charismatic sociopaths are self-serving and manipulative but not attractive. Alan Watts (1915-1973) In the 1970s, the British philosopher Alan Watts wrote an essay on the best way to be charitable (see: "The Real Meaning of the I Ching"). In it, he said: "Charity is born of love, it is the generosity of the spirit that spurs it on. Charities are social benefits that altruistic individuals grant one another. For a charity to be real, it can't be based on obligation. It has to be voluntarily born of love. It has to be what it is; it has to be love." It's unfortunate that Watts was not kinder to charismatic giving. For what's his idea of a manipulative sociopath?
